Four Quarter Square Method:

The Four Quarter Square Method is an innovative and structured approach developed by Mr. Mohit Mangal to provide impactful career counseling. By focusing on four key dimensions—Orientation, Aptitude, Personality, and Interest—this method offers a comprehensive understanding of an individual's potential and career path.

Orientation:

Orientation analyzes how individuals approach learning and decision-making. It considers Academic Orientation, which focuses on theoretical and structured learning, and Practical Orientation, which emphasizes hands-on problem-solving and real-world application. People Orientation highlights strong interpersonal and collaborative focus, while Closed or Preconceived Orientation identifies a rigid mindset that requires broadening perspectives.

Aptitude:

Aptitude assesses natural talents and capabilities. Mathematical & Computing Aptitude reflects logical reasoning and technical problem-solving skills, while Scientific Aptitude emphasizes critical thinking and experimentation. Social Sciences & Languages Aptitude highlights communication and cultural understanding, and Skill-Based Aptitude focuses on practical, task-oriented abilities that align with specific trades or crafts.

Personality:

Personality provides insights into traits and role compatibility. Low Academic / Low Practical individuals often require motivation and foundational skill-building. Low Academic / High Practical individuals are creative and excel in hands-on tasks. High Academic / Low Practical individuals are curious and explorative learners, while High Academic / High Practical individuals embody visionary leaders and strategists.

Interest:

Interest aligns passions with career opportunities. It considers specific subjects or skills that individuals enjoy, as well as general observations from hobbies or activities. Understanding how individuals interact with their environment and people provides further clues to aligning career paths with their intrinsic motivations.

This method dynamically integrates these dimensions, offering career recommendations that are aligned with market realities and personal potential. Under Mr. Mangal's expert guidance, the Four Quarter Square Method has set new benchmarks in career counseling by empowering individuals to make informed and fulfilling career choices.
